RHODES SCHOLARSHIPS.
For three years now American students have been pursuing undergraduate work at Oxford under the generous provisions of the Cecil Rhodes foundation. They were sent there and furnished each with an annual income of $300 for the purpose of promoting a warmer union between this country and England. When it is considered that in the past Africa has caused no little trouble and discord to the Anglo-Saxon, it seems to many whimsically appropriate that African resources should have been devoted to the production of a closer link kinship among the nations who represent the various Teutonic and Anglo-Saxon ramifications. However, it is not to be supposed that this coincidence suggested itself to the late Cecil Rhodes when he conceived his gigantic purpose and devised the terms of his magnificently visionary trust.
Interest in the American students abroad is now revived by the fact that the first company selected to take advantage of the Rhodes scholarship, in 1904, have now completed their allotted period of three years' residence, and their places are soon to be filled by others upon whom will devolve the duty of upholding American attainment, academic and athletic. In this country speculation on the matter of these scholarships has all along concerned itself, not as to whether our representatives would prove themselves efficacious and worthy welders of nations, but chiefly with the question whether they would be able to put their best foot forward and adapt themselves to the entirely unfamiliar conditions. They, too, it was naturally anticipated that American students would have to cope more or less with some little social aloofness from such English conservatives as might look with disfavor upon this intrusion of fresh blood.
Happily, in this last respect misgivings have been wholly groundless; and in the matter of scholarships the American Oxonians have furnished a pleasant surprise, in spite of the serious handicaps of an entirely new system of scholastic work. The first set of students to enter Oxford under the Rhodes bequest have not only made a very creditable showing, but they have done far more than this. In the ranks of the "honored men" the American group are distinctly conspicuous. This group comprises about one-fourth of the undergraduate body, and a position in it betokens a higher degree of scholarship than is required by the better American universities for the degree of bachelor of arts. The success of the American students indicates that careful and wise selections have been made by the several State committees, notwithstanding the difficult qualification of the Rhodes foundation. For the future even better results can be predicted. The company of American Oxonians who have now completed their course were thoroughly pioneers in the field, with no more knowledge than a casual familiarity with the names of one or two of the different colleges which together compose the university. Even those who had been to Oxford in the role of tourists acquired no understanding of the scholastic routine. But their three years' experience as students has, through published letters and magazine articles, become common property, and future aspirants will have a much clearer idea of what is before them and how to prepare and equip themselves intelligently to meet it.

TEXAS AND THE TRUSTS.
It has been suggested by wise men that the most efficacious method of striking repentance and changed lives from certain financial pirates would be to ignore them entirely and refuse them all fellowship with their kind. It is reasoned by the advocates of this treatment that a capitalist in Coventry would suffer tortures of remorse, somewhat analogously, the Texas Legislature has passed a law boycotting all goods of trust manufacture, and making it a felony for anybody to sell within the State borders articles made by any trust or combination. The argument in support of this measure is to the effect that it will hurt the trusts, help the independent manufacturer, and put him in a stronger position to compete with the trusts elsewhere.
It cannot be denied that this is a dangerous heroic law-making, and as a restriction on retailer and consumer it is equally inconsistent, coming from a legislative body, who, no doubt, individually and collectively, disapprove of a protective tariff because it deprives them of the right to buy goods from any market anywhere. On the surface such a law appears questionable, both in constitutionality and in merit.
But even if it is valid, it is interesting to speculate how such a splendid enactment would work out. Obviously, as far as it concerns many articles of trust manufacture, its chief burdens would fall where so many present-day burdens fall—upon the retailer. In regard to these articles, the consumer would possibly be put to some little trouble, but that is about all. For no matter how virile an opposer of combines the individual consumer may be, he is not going to substantiate his hate by learning to smoke a new kind of cigar or to chew an inferior variety of plug. Give him battles to fight and he will fight them, speeches to make and he will declaim; but he has no intention of foregoing his chosen commodities, and, if need be, he will order them from beyond the State border rather than lose them.
Accordingly, under this law the retailer would suffer loss in his trade if he should cheerfully submit to the sacrifice and obey the law, but if he should defy the law it does not follow by any means that he would straightway be conducted to the State penitentiary. In order to convict him of violating this statute, for instance, by selling sugar made by the American Sugar Company, the prosecution would necessarily have to establish the fact that this company is an illegal combination. This would require proof, and it would not suffice to rely on the popular belief of the nature of the American Sugar Company. And finally and above all, it is not likely that the Supreme Court of the United States would deem constitutional a penal statute by which a State confines one of its citizens in the penitentiary for selling to other citizens goods which are in themselves entirely harmless.
Unquestionably the Texans, and there are about three million and a half of them, have it in their power to boycott trust-made goods. But will they do it because their Legislature tells them to do so? Will they be willing to do without steel rails for their railroads, and to pay a greater price for their kerosene oil? To make this anti-trust statute effective they must co-operate in support of it. Will they do it? Admitting that they hate the trusts, it still remains that they probably hate to spend money unnecessarily and to live uncomfortably. Assuming that this statute comes in response to popular outcry against the trusts, the Texas Legislature has very cleverly managed to "put it up" to the people; and while the issue thus produced is a trifle disconcerting as a test and measure of sincerity of their polemic against the trusts, still, unless they faithfully and enthusiastically obey their Legislature in this law, they will furnish undeniable ground for the accusation that their attitude to illegal combinations closely resembles that of the Athenians to Alcibiades—that is, they hate them, but cannot do without them.

EDUCATIONAL EXPANSION.
In nothing has the growth of The Times-Dispatch been more marked, or its capacity to serve the people been more strongly emphasized, than in the increased demands for space in its Educational Supplement, which has been printed for the second time. There are, all told, eighty-four institutions represented in this supplement, a striking and impressive proof of the high position held by Virginia and North Carolina as centers of education. In addition to the advertisements which represent the oldest, best and most distinguished schools in our State, The Times-Dispatch has been fortunate in securing a special article from His Excellency Governor Swanson, on the splendid progress in Virginia's schools, and Superintendents of Public Instruction J. D. Eggleston, of Virginia, and J. Y. Joyner, of North Carolina, have each discussed the growth and progress of education in their respective States. Dr. Bruce R. Payne, of the University of Virginia, has a most suggestive article on the educational waste in the South by reason of the failure of the Southern States as a whole to insist upon the right of the child to be educated. Special articles are also contributed by Mr. W. S. Copeland on the usefulness of the small colleges and by Mr. C. K. Howell on the best methods of constructing school buildings. The Times-Dispatch is naturally proud of this representation of the institutions of learning, and the spreading and growing of the spirit of education in this State. This pride is one in which the whole State of Virginia may justly share. Education is the basis of our life to-day, and that Virginia's life is firmly grounded on eternal principles is shown by the splendid review of her colleges and schools.

RICHMOND'S BANK DEPOSITS.
July one year ago there were deposited in the banks and trust companies of Richmond $26,430,938. On July 1, 1907, this amount had grown to $31,683,898, being an increase of almost exactly five million dollars in twelve months. This is a remarkable and highly creditable showing for the solid prosperity of Richmond. In Philadelphia, for example, the deposits in banks and trust companies are $15,000,000 smaller to-day than they were in 1906, and the Philadelphia Press is full of the vanishing stream of gold is very difficult to trace. Some of Philadelphia's fifteen million has been poured doubtless into the yawning mouths of fake mining schemes in the West, some has certainly gone into real estate investments, and other some has doubtless been employed by the increased demands for capital in business and ordinary expenses. So far as investments in real estate are concerned, though there has been a very great boom in suburban property in New York and Philadelphia, it is yet true that those who were wise enough to buy homes or make investments in the real estate market have fared far better than their friends and neighbors who trusted their savings on the treacherous seas of stock speculation. The country was never richer in its history than at the present time. We have never done more business, or been enjoying more apparent prosperity. The very demands, however, of the increased business upon the floating capital has tended to lessen capital deposits by keeping in active circulation or by transforming into fixed capital large sums of money which would otherwise have been deposited in the banks, and, therefore, would have become available for the more usual forms of investment. While the general deposits of the banks and trust companies of Philadelphia have not been increasing for the last twelve months, it will not be forgotten that one savings bank in Philadelphia has deposits of $30,000,000, and one in New York, which, by the way, pays four percent, has recently received the enormous deposits of $100,000,000. The savings banks' depositors, therefore, have been increasing their assets while their more speculative brethren have been chewing the cud of bitter thought, and viewing with dismay shrinking inventories as a result of ill-timed speculation. In Richmond, however, though very large losses have been incurred by some, the city as a whole was never so prosperous as at present, and the showing of the banks and trust companies evidence the marked increase in the capital of this community.

PERSONALS AND GENERAL.
Then from whence does this evil proceed? Surely it must be a "product of hell." Hint at the whiskey for die are in perfect harmony; there is not a single jar or the slightest discord between them. Again, if the devil has the power to use liquor "as a means of devilry," has he not the power to inspire its manufacture and sale?—South Boston News.
Have a care, Brother Beazley, or you will make the devil the greatest power on earth. Already the creeds have exalted him into successful defiance of Omnipotence—which is simply preposterous—and he goes about with a free hand seeking whom he may devour. We don't know much about the devil—a personal devil—but we shrewdly suspect that he is merely an excuse for somebody else to lay it on. We are inclined to think the devil gets blamed for a great deal he is not guilty of. But guilt is the power to use liquor "as a means of devilry," has he not the power to inspire its manufacture and sale?—South Boston News.

Poems You Ought to Know

Whatever your occupation may be, and however crowded your hours with affairs, do not fail to secure at least a few minutes every day for refreshment of your inner life with a bit of poetry.—Prof. Charles Eliot Norton.

No. 1238.
Envoy
By BLISS CARMAN.

Other selections from this author, his portrait, autograph and biographical sketch, have already been printed in this series.

Have little care that Life is brief,
And less that Art is long.
Success is in the silences,
Though Fame is in the song.

With the Orient in her eyes,
Life my mistress lured me on.
"Knowledge," said that look of hers,
"Shall be yours when all is done."

Like a pomegranate in halves,
"Drink me," said that mouth of hers,
And I drank who now am here
Where my dust with dust confers.

Rhymes for To-Day

LOVE-SONGS OF AN INMATE.

12. DISCOVERED.
SOPHY, I've been awake and scared
All night, and still I feel no better;
O, had you seen that I was spared
This letter!

You know why tears bedim my eye,
Most of all, my armfuls and dissonance:
Your father's writ to ask me my Intentions.

He's learned of all you've spent on me—
The figures threw him in a twitter;
They've maddened him! He seems to be
So bitter.

He asks with blunt and biting tongue,
If, after my large cash collections,
I've dared to trifle with your young
Affections.

He swears no man shall sport and play
With one whose frailty should be Pitied.
Whose actions prove her, so they say,
Half-witted.

He speaks of penalties of sin,
Of afterthoughts most deleterious,
He mentions horsewhips if I've been
Not serious.

Sophy, I'm leaving town the morn—
I am! There's little use of kicking;
I dare not face your father's scorn
Or kicking.

Please see him, dearest, and forestall
His anger while it's embryonic:
Assure him that my love is all
Platonic.

People Seen in Public Places

Mr. John W. Williams, clerk of the House of Delegates, arrived in the city yesterday from his home at Pearisburg, in Giles county, and is disposing of some business in his office at the Capitol. Mr. Williams will remain here for several days, and during his stay will look after a number of official matters of importance.
He has no opposition for re-election to the position of clerk so far, and will very likely have none, as he is a most popular and efficient officer. A mass-meeting will be held at Pearisburg next Monday to nominate a candidate for the House from the counties of Giles and Bland. So far as is known, there are no seekers after the place. Judge Martin Williams will probably be the nominee, if he should care to make the race again. Judge Williams is the incumbent, and made a most faithful and intelligent representative.

If he does not care to run again, Senator Peyton F. St. Clair, of the same county, may make the race. It is not believed that they will oppose one another, or that either cares much about the place. Whoever is nominated by the Democrats will win, however, as the district is now safely Democratic.

A letter has been received by Dr. C. W. P. Brock from Lieutenant George Lee, son of the late General Fitzhugh Lee, who is now stationed at Shanghai.

Lieutenant Lee is in charge of the distribution of rations given by the United States government to the Chinese soldiers at the front. He is in good health, and that he expects to return here by the end of July.

Hon. Thomas H. Edwards, of West Point, former member of the House of Delegates from Hanover and King William, who is making the race for another seat in that body, was in the city yesterday, on his way home from a campaign in the Hanover district. Mr. Edwards attended the annual outing of the Ashland Lodge, Jr. O. U. A. M., at Ashland Park on Thursday, and the occasion was a most enjoyable one.

Refreshments were served, and there was dancing in the afternoon. Numerous delegates from the various lodges were present, and they were "swinging corners right and left" with the country maidens until late in the evening. Mr. Edwards, who is a well-known competitor for the House, was both present and in good luck. They were both present, and it is learned that they were very much pleased with the result. It became necessary to make up a set. They are both regarded as pretty apt with their feet, and though Mr. Edwards lost the race at a point far beyond the two hundred mark, his avowed opponent has not yet interfered with his victory.

J. W. Swift and wife, Chase City; J. C. Peck, Lexington; Matt Matthews, Temperanceville; A. Wright, Patuxent; W. S. Bradley, Norfolk, are at Murphy's.

Virginians at the Richmond are John M. Collins and wife, Monterey; J. C. Nelson, Portsmouth, and D. Allen, Staunton.

MAN OVERBOARD.
Deck-Hand of the Pocomtous Drowned Near Exposition Grounds.
Sherman Barber, a colored deck-hand on the steamer Pocomtous, fell overboard as the steamer was leaving the exposition pier on Thursday night to make its upstream trip to Richmond with the Light Infantry Blues on board.
The deck-hand had been indulging in whiskey all day, and was said to have been quite drunk when he lost his balance and fell overboard. The steamer was stopped when a cry of "Man overboard" was sounded, and a search was made for the body, but the outgoing current was very strong at the time, and nothing was seen of the man. It was raining very hard and was quite dark at the time.
Barber had been with the steamer for a long time, and was considered a very good deck-hand, his only fault being his disposition to get on periodical drinks.

SAVING ARMY MEETINGS.
At 10:30 A. M., a regular prayer-meeting in the chapel of the Soldiers' Home.
At 3:30, a big open-air meeting at the Intervenor Park. A well-known member of the Railroad Y. M. C. A. will be present to sing several songs for us. Other friends will also speak, and the captain will speak on "Heaven," by request.
At 8 o'clock a regular salvation meeting in the hall. Several comrades will speak and sing. A little lassie will sing a special solo. The captain will give a talk on "Brainstorm No New Theory," an up-to-date talk on practical religion.

SOCIAL and PERSONAL

Kimono Fete.
A number of little Richmond people recently participated in an extremely pretty entertainment, a kimono fete, given by Mrs. E. Lansing Fox, of Scottsville, to her daughters, Mary and Katherine, and their youthful friends. The house was beautifully decorated in Japanese fashion, and tea was served on a veranda hung with gay colored lanterns.
The two juvenile hostesses, Misses Mary and Katherine, wore, the one, light green with large pink roses and bows, the other, pink with white and pink hydrangeas and nasturtiums and a blue sash. The little Richmonders in the company included Miss Elizabeth Frazier, in pink appliqued with yellow nasturtiums and green conventional design; Misses Louise and Anne Powers, attired respectively in green with pink figures and facings and large white chrysanthemums, and in pale blue with pink facings and chrysanthemums.
Miss Elizabeth Thompson wore pink with yellow figures, an old rose bush and trimmings, and Master Samuel Thompson was one of the "little men." The fete was as enjoyable as it was lovely, and was largely attended.

House Party.
Misses Louise and Cecilia Miller are giving a large house party at their home, "Sunnyside," near Stephen's City, Frederick county. Dancing, driving and card parties are among the amusements provided for the company, the members of which are Misses Marguerite Ladd, Gladys Doudard and Edna Swann, of Covington, Ky.; Miss Marion Jones, of Culpeper, Va.; Miss Julia Price, of New Market; Miss Bertha Bowles, of Clarke; Baltimore; Harry H. Birthday Kept.
The birthday of Mr. William Charlton, of Missouri, who has been visiting the old Charles home near Christiansburg, Va., was celebrated last week by a delightful dinner, at which thirty-six members of the family sat around the board to pledge long life and happiness to their guest and kinsman.
Mr. Charlton, who is celebrating his birthday, will visit Richmond before going back to Missouri.

If he does not care to run again, Senator Peyton F. St. Clair, of the same county, may make the race. It is not believed that they will oppose one another, or that either cares much about the place. Whoever is nominated by the Democrats will win, however, as the district is now safely Democratic.

A letter has been received by Dr. C. W. P. Brock from Lieutenant George Lee, son of the late General Fitzhugh Lee, who is now stationed at Shanghai.

Lieutenant Lee is in charge of the distribution of rations given by the United States government to the Chinese soldiers at the front. He is in good health, and that he expects to return here by the end of July.

Hon. Thomas H. Edwards, of West Point, former member of the House of Delegates from Hanover and King William, who is making the race for another seat in that body, was in the city yesterday, on his way home from a campaign in the Hanover district. Mr. Edwards attended the annual outing of the Ashland Lodge, Jr. O. U. A. M., at Ashland Park on Thursday, and the occasion was a most enjoyable one.

Refreshments were served, and there was dancing in the afternoon. Numerous delegates from the various lodges were present, and they were "swinging corners right and left" with the country maidens until late in the evening. Mr. Edwards, who is a well-known competitor for the House, was both present and in good luck. They were both present, and it is learned that they were very much pleased with the result. It became necessary to make up a set. They are both regarded as pretty apt with their feet, and though Mr. Edwards lost the race at a point far beyond the two hundred mark, his avowed opponent has not yet interfered with his victory.

J. W. Swift and wife, Chase City; J. C. Peck, Lexington; Matt Matthews, Temperanceville; A. Wright, Patuxent; W. S. Bradley, Norfolk, are at Murphy's.

Virginians at the Richmond are John M. Collins and wife, Monterey; J. C. Nelson, Portsmouth, and D. Allen, Staunton.

MAN OVERBOARD.
Deck-Hand of the Pocomtous Drowned Near Exposition Grounds.
Sherman Barber, a colored deck-hand on the steamer Pocomtous, fell overboard as the steamer was leaving the exposition pier on Thursday night to make its upstream trip to Richmond with the Light Infantry Blues on board.
The deck-hand had been indulging in whiskey all day, and was said to have been quite drunk when he lost his balance and fell overboard. The steamer was stopped when a cry of "Man overboard" was sounded, and a search was made for the body, but the outgoing current was very strong at the time, and nothing was seen of the man. It was raining very hard and was quite dark at the time.
Barber had been with the steamer for a long time, and was considered a very good deck-hand, his only fault being his disposition to get on periodical drinks.
